M&S ARCHIVE

Reminiscence Image Pack

The 1950s

Cling Fit Stockings, c1957

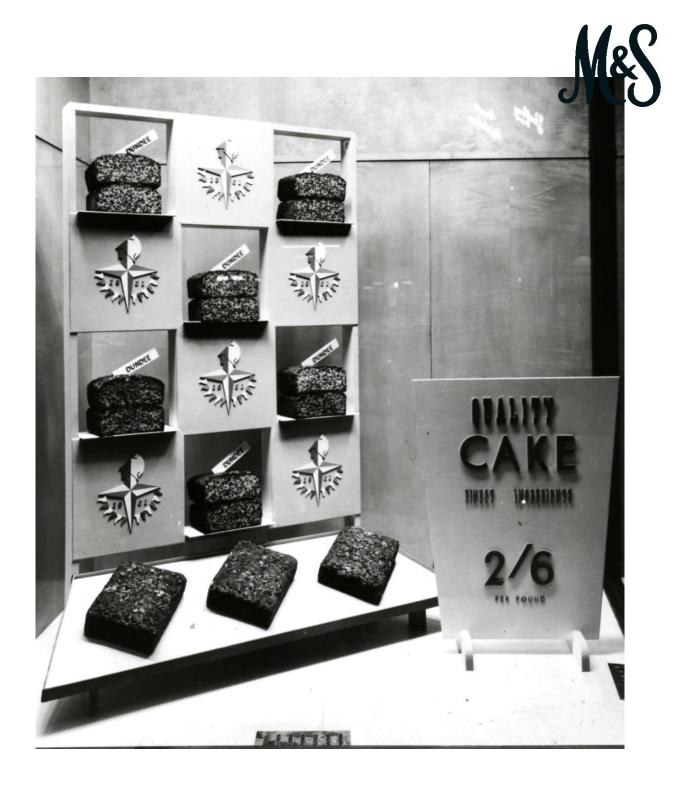

In 1957 M&S introduced seam-free stockings, and a range of fully fashioned super-fit nylons which wouldn't wrinkle around the ankle. As hemlines went up in the 1960s, we sold fewer pairs of stockings and more tights.

Nylon Floral Dress, 1950s

Made from Nylon this dress would have been very easy to wash and dry. With its nipped in waist and full skirt the dress is typical of the 1950s style, which saw fashion move away from the restrictions on fabric during the war.

Festival of Britain Window Display, 1951

The 1951 Festival of Britain was a national exhibition organised by the government to promote recovery in the aftermath of war. M&S employees created window displays to tie in with the exhibition's themes of science, technology and the arts. This photograph show displays of cake in Oxford store.

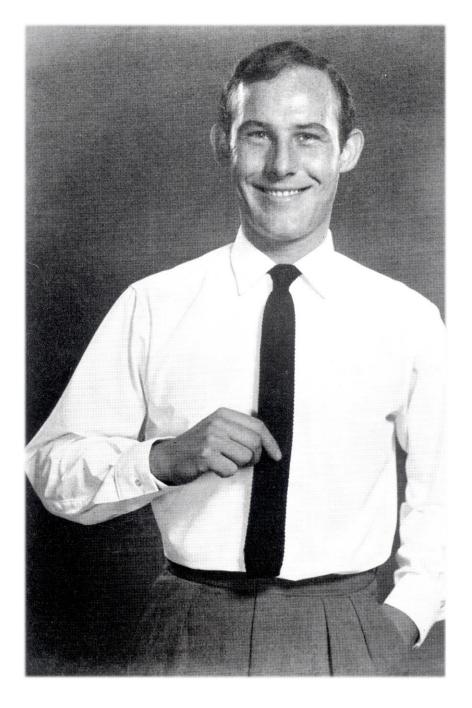

Festival of Britain Window Display, 1951

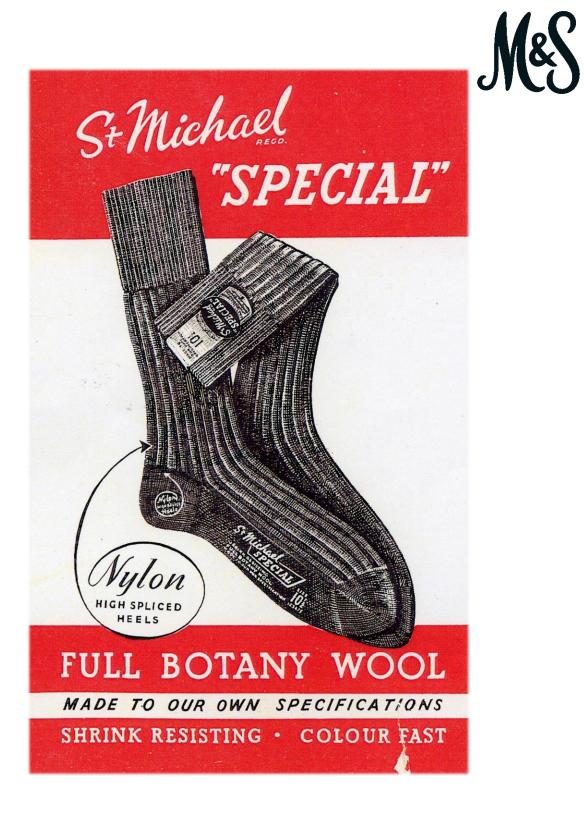

Like the previous photograph, this display of shirts was created to celebrate the festival.

Shirt with knitted tie, 1950s

This tie is made from a knitted strip of fabric – making it quite difficult to knot! During the 1950s M&S sales assistants were given training to help customers knot their ties. The shirt has a pre-attached collar, but M&S also sold collarless shirts, spare collars and studs, so men could change and wash their collars between wears.

Sock advert, 1953

Botany wool (another name for Merino) came from Australia and New Zealand. It was used for everything from socks and jumpers to suits and baby clothes.

Christmas advert, 1958

The man's jumper in this advert cost 42s, the lady's jersey dress was 85s, while her apron cost 5s. The Christmas pudding was sold for 2s 6d, and mince pies were available for 1s 2d for a pack of four.

Advert for Luggage, 1959

As well as clothing, M&S also sold accessories like this matching set of luggage. Exotic settings or airports were used for photoshoot locations, as more customers were taking holidays abroad.

It's Scarf Time, 1958

This advert promoted scarves as Christmas gifts. Mohair was a popular fabric for scarves in the 1950s – made from the hair of the Angora goat. Worsted was also widely used, and most of our checked scarves were woven in Scotland.

M & S REMEMBERS 1

NEW SIZE RANGES FOR HER IN MARSPUN at 27s. 11d.

DETAILS of the new Shorter Woman Size range, given in this issue, show it to be a line of merchandise likely to appeal to a considerable cross-section of the Marks and pencer buying public.

Twenty top stores initially are to receive a new range of izes for the shorter woman together with extensive publicity naterial.

The decision to enter the smaller woman field follows many equests from members of the public, and is in line with the recently liscovered fact that the majority of British woman are five foot wo or under.

WHAT'S in a name? If it's the right one, five guineas. This is what's involved: no-one has so far been able to think of a really good name for the new 'Shorter Wo man' range, and you can win phrase which flatters the vast group of women who are five foot two or under. Hence the search for a new crisp, word. Send us what you think, and for the best, most apt word—or short phrase—we will award a prize of five guineas. Suggestions to: Sales Development, Michael House, Baker Street, London, W.1.

TWENTY STORES PLAN

> The range is graded in all its measurements and styled for the shorter woman in teen-age, small women's, women's and WX sizes. "A woman's dress condensed" is one description, and it is a very good one. There has been no skimping or unnecessary economy on these dresses. They have all the selling points and qualities of the normal printed Marspun range, on a

There is a range of a dozen styles, but the bodice and the skirt have been scaled down. The accessories too, generally, are smaller.

Designed to fit from shoulder to waist, the general effect is of neatness, and of a compact, dainty fashion-conscious creation. The department is confident that the range is broad enough-and attractive enough-to (turn to page 2, col. 3)

Shorter Woman range, this fashion-conscious young lady knows that her dress has been modelled to make a compact, dainty creation, matched to her figure and purse.

The Shorter Woman, 1953

In 1953 we launched a range of dresses and accessories to fit our more petite customers. Both the bodice and the skirt were scaled down, and we sold a range of smaller accessories too. We ran a competition to name the new range – the winner would receive five guineas!

Dirk Bogarde's Ideal Salesgirl

No Monroe but clean and

When on the set of Lewis innate consideration for others. Gilbert's production, "THE So, and most essential, to wood, John Bold asked me the ments salesgirl, this question seemed a poser.

your job. I had to sit down just starting off in this fascinafor a quiet half hour and really ing business of selling to pin-point those extra qualities others, I would give this advice which make me always seek from my own professional out the same salesgirl in my experience. favourite stores.

equally important, and I give customers ; listen to their rethem in no particular order. quirements and try to satisfy First, my ideal salesgirl is them; and never oversell. well-groomed, clean and neat. Above all, never adopt a I don't expect to see a Marilyn take-it - or - leave - it attitude. Monroe, but I do like to see Make them feel cosy. a girl with shining hair, spot- I'm told you are less accessories, well-mani- trained to deal with every cured hands and make-up emergency after a few months' rather reverse!

So, and most essential, to NAKED FLAME," in which number three-imagination in I star with Margaret Lock- foreseeing customers' requireand never being characteristics of my ideal stumped by an unusual request.

This does seem a tall order. There are so many sides to But for those of you who are

Learn to smile like an I think three essentials are actress even at the most trying fully underdone than the period on non-busy counters. All I can say is, if you half-This leads me to point way qualify for my ideal in number two, a pleasant per- this time, I take my hat off sonality. That means to me an to you! ********

Dirk Bogarde's Ideal Salesgirl, 1955

Dirk Bogarde, star of 'The Blue Lamp' and 'Doctor in the House', talks about the qualities he thinks salesgirls should have. He likes 'shining hair, spotless accessories, well-manicured hands, and make-up rather underdone'! Did you know Dirk's real name was Sir Derek Jules Gaspard Ulric Niven van den Bogaerde?

St Michael News, 1955

St Michael News was the staff magazine at M&S from 1953 until 2000. It gave information about new products and store updates, and contained some beautiful fashion photography. Here the models are boarding a BEA flight, as a helicopter hovers above them.

Menswear and Womenswear, 1958

This dress was made from cotton, while the man is wearing a drip-dry shirt and Terylene trousers. M&S introduced lots of synthetic fabrics during the 1950s, all with the aim of making the customer's life easier – fabrics that were easier to wear, easy to care for and more hard-wearing.

Skirts and Blouses, 1959

These brightly printed skirts were made from fabric known as dobby cloth, which had more texture than standard cotton.

COLLAR ATTACHED POPLIN SHIRTS

- Made from pre-shrunk superfine poplin of two-fold yarns for strength and durability.
 - ★ Vat dyed for fast colours.
 - * Specially processed inter-lining for extra collar smartness.
 - Every shirt in a film bag for added cleanliness.
 - Cloth specially woven, and shirt specially made, for Marks & Spencer.

Collar attached Poplin shirts, 1955

In the 1950s shirts with attached collars became more popular, rather than detachable collars secured with studs. M&S used an innovative technique known as Trubenizing to ensure collars maintained fit and shape after washing.

Advert for St Michael Biscuits, 1957

This advert featured on a leaflet that was put into customers' shopping bags. Popular biscuits with our customers at the time were Morning Coffee, Custard Creams and Butter Puffs. In 1956 we sold over 1.3 billion biscuits!

Display of Biscuits, Dartford, 1959

Our biscuits were packaged in brightly coloured boxes and cellophane wrappers. Customers commented that this attractive and hygienic packaging was the reason they bought M&S biscuits (as well as the taste of course!). At the corner of this shelf we can see boxes of the 'Big Six' assortment which included teacakes, chocolate sandwich biscuits and jaffa eclairs.

Table Creams Sign, 1950s

Our table creams came in a range of flavours, as seen on this advertising sign. Cakes and desserts were incredibly popular at M&S in the 1950s. Sugar was rationed from 1940 up until 1953. Once it came off ration, the range of sweet treats sold in M&S quickly expanded!

Food packaging, 1950s

Cakes, sweets and puddings were some of our most popular products in the 1950s. The brightly illustrated labels were designed to catch the customer's eye. St Michael was the brand name of M&S from 1928 until 2000. It appeared on food packaging from the 1950s.

BLACKCURRANT & APPLE

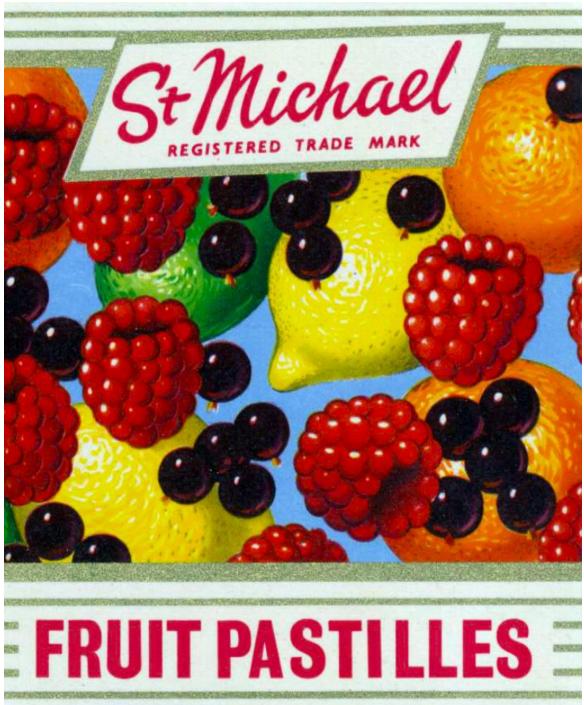

tichael Fruit

-

Food packaging, 1950s

Food packaging, 1950s